BOERNE – City staff and officials, along with several area partners, met Tuesday for a safety planning meeting ahead of two solar eclipses set to occur in the Hill Country over the next couple years.
The Tuesday meeting, held at the Boerne Fire Department, is the third of what will be several meetings ahead of an annual eclipse on Oct. 14, 2023, and a total solar eclipse on April 8, 2024.

While the annual eclipse is expected to bring in large numbers of tourists, the total eclipse will be the biggest draw.

An annual solar eclipse refers to the solar event when the moon covers the center of the sun, creating a “ring of fire” around the moon’s edge.

Tens of thousands of people are expected to flood Boerne and the Hill Country to witness these natural phenomena as the city will be in the path of both eclipses. Staff, joined by our community partners, has begun planning and preparing to assure residents and visitors can safely enjoy the eclipses.

Kendall County and Boerne residents have two weeks to register to vote on several measures and races that could have a lasting impact on the area.

The voter-registration deadline is Oct. 11 with both the county and city voting in multimillion-dollar bond measures, as well as a decision to create an emergency services district for the Boerne community.

Early voting runs Oct. 24 through Nov. 8, with Election Day Nov. 8.

Residents will see free county elected judge up for grabs. A race for state representative is also on the ballot.

Chad Carpenter is running for state representative for District 46.

Dear Doctors: I got a few patches of itchy, red skin on my arms six months ago. It left a purple scar, so I thought it was a case of atopic dermatitis, but the cream that I bought didn’t work. My friend says it’s eczema. She let me try her prescription from her vet. Does that mean I have eczema?

Dear Reader: Your physical symptoms are the same, but they may describe different conditions. Atopic dermatitis is a chronic inflammatory skin condition that can cause redness, swelling, and itching. Eczema is a term that describes a group of related skin conditions that cause dry, itchy skin. Eczema can be caused by many different factors, such as food allergies, infections, and environmental triggers. Atopic dermatitis is a specific type of eczema that is often associated with other allergic conditions, such as hay fever and asthma. It is more common in people with a family history of allergies and is typically seen in childhood. Eczema can be a chronic condition that requires ongoing management.

Consult a veterinarian or a dermatologist for an accurate diagnosis and treatment plan. They can help determine the underlying cause of your skin condition and provide appropriate treatment options. In some cases, eczema may be managed with topical medications, such as steroids or moisturizers, or with systemic treatments, such as immunosuppressants. Left untreated, eczema can lead to complications, such as skin infections and allergies. It is important to maintain good skin care practices, such as using moisturizers and avoiding irritants, to help manage eczema symptoms. If you have any concerns or symptoms, it is recommended to seek professional advice from a healthcare provider.

The 5 underlying issues of conflict

When you see the word "conflict," your mind may jump to images of violence, aggression, and anger. Conflict can certainly have those elements, but it’s not limited to these extremes. Conflict is a broader concept that includes any situation where two or more people or groups have differences of opinion or disagreement. It can manifest in many forms, from subtle to severe. Understanding the underlying issues of conflict is crucial for resolving disputes effectively. Here are five common underlying issues of conflict:

1. Communication Barriers: Misunderstandings, misinterpretations, and lack of clear and open communication can lead to conflict. When individuals do not express their thoughts and feelings accurately or listen attentively to others, conflicts can arise.

2. Unmet Needs: The need for validation, recognition, or other needs not being met can cause conflict. When there is a gap between what someone expects and what they receive, frustration and resentment can grow.

3. Power and Control: Power dynamics and attempts to control others can lead to conflict. When one person feels their power is threatened, they may react defensively, leading to disagreements.

4. Unfairness: Feelings of unfairness and inequity in situations such as work, relationships, or life decisions can escalate into conflict when people perceive they are not being treated equally.

5. Inadequate Relationship Skills: Lack of effective communication, conflict resolution, and relationship-building skills can contribute to conflict. People may struggle with understanding and expressing their needs and feelings, seeking mutual understanding, and resolving conflicts in a constructive manner.

By addressing these underlying issues, individuals and groups can start to resolve conflicts more effectively and build stronger, more peaceful relationships. Remember, conflict is a normal part of human interaction, and with the right approach, it can lead to growth and understanding.

Q: My wife and I are always arguing about who does what around the house, kids, work, etc. Everything. Neither of us want to argue, and we’re not sure how we get here, but we can’t seem to help ourselves. What’s going on?

A: Dr. Greg Smalley, Vice-President, Marriage & Family Ministry; Ray and Jeanne’s husband - “The Issue isn’t the Issue.” What that means in this context is regardless of what you and your spouse are arguing about, the conflict is likely rooted in one of five underlying issues. Purse and Power. This struggle typically reveals itself in arguments over plans, emotions, and finances. Conflict is inevitable when both spouses are fighting for control to some degree or when one is trying to prevent the other from taking control. Lack of trust. This happens when there’s a disregard for key differences in personality, values, or preferences. This might be the case when the feelings, rights or decisions of one spouse are ignored. Attempts to manipulate fall into this category. Distance. When spouses are unacknowledgable physically or emotionally. Sometimes, one spouse will put up emotional walls for protective purposes or can create feelings of rejection and alienation for the other. Distort. Conflict thrives here if a relationship doesn’t feel safe, secure and distant can flare up and
